19. 다음 글에 드러난 Karolina의 심경으로 가장 적절한 것은?

"Hey, Siri! Play 'Yeah' by Usher!" Harry called from the back of the van. A chorus of cheers went up from the boys when Siri chirped, "Okay, playing 'Yeah' by Usher," and the bass blasted through the speakers. Karolina smiled. Never in a million years would she have thought having a car full of twelve-year-old boys could be fun. They were loud and even sometimes smelled bad. But Harry's friends were also sweet and quick to laugh and made an attempt at manners, at least when she was around. They were good kids from nice families, and once again, she felt good for the move that had taken her family from New York to Bethesda. My sweet boy, Karolina thought for the thousandth time as she looked at Harry from the rearview mirror. This would be another great day, she thought.

20. 다음 글에서 필자가 주장하는 바로 가장 적절한 것은?

Nuclear weapons are weapons that destroy everything. They don't pick and choose what gets wiped out and what doesn't. They simply destroy everything. We all know that nuclear weapons historically have been used two times, on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, so why can't they be used again? There are about 27,000 nuclear weapons in the world, enough to wipe humankind out three times over. Chernobyl and Red Forest are both huge examples of what could happen if a country chooses to launch a nuclear weapon. If nuclear weapons remain on the earth, we're all going to die, so they need to go.

21. 밑줄 친 keep his word가 다음 글에서 의미하는 바로 가장 적절한 것은?

As a boy at school Webster made a serious mistake, for which he was called up to the teacher's desk to have the palm of his right hand caned. Aware that his hands were very dirty, he made an effort to rub off some of the dirt as he walked up to the desk. Nevertheless, the hand he held out was exceedingly dirty. The teacher looked at it strictly and then said, "Daniel Webster, if you can find another hand as dirty as that in this schoolroom, I'll let you off." Out from behind the boy's back came the left hand. "Here it is, sir," said young Webster. The teacher had to keep his word.

22. 다음 글의 요지로 가장 적절한 것은?

You see a pair of shoes that you really like, but they fit just a bit tight. "No problem," the salesperson says, "we can stretch them to fit your foot and they'll be good." The salesperson stretches the shoes and the fit isn't bad, not great, but not totally uncomfortable. So you buy them. You have been on your feet all day and you figure that your feet are probably swollen, so the shoes will be fine if you just wait a day. You think it's only one day so you keep trying because you really like the shoes. Yet, every time you put the shoes on, all you get are sore feet and painful blisters. However, by this point, it's too late; the shoes have been so scuffed that they can't be returned. Don't let your job be that way. And please, don't allow your passion for your job to be driven out. Let's make that fit a good one from the start.

*scuff: 흠을 내다

⑤ 중요한 결정을 내리기 전에 실험 단계를 거쳐야 한다.

23. 다음 글의 주제로 가장 적절한 것은?

'Bread' serves as a metaphor for basic necessities and living conditions in general. A 'bread-winner' is a household's main economic contributor and has little to do with the actual supply of bread. This also goes along with the expression "putting bread on the table." A remarkable innovation is often referred to as "the greatest thing since sliced bread." In the USSR, Lenin and his fellow Bolsheviks promised "Peace, Land, and Bread," which thereby became a mainstay slogan of the Soviet Union. In Newfoundland, bread was seen as having the power to protect against fairies. The term "breadbasket" is often used to mean an agriculturally productive region. In Slavic cultures, bread and salt is offered as a welcome to all guests.

*metaphor: 은유
mainstay: 중심, 대들보

① recipes with bread
② various ways to bake bread
③ influence of political slogans
④ symbolic meanings of bread
⑤ common themes in fairy tales

24. 다음 글의 제목으로 가장 적절한 것은?

For most people, it's saying no that's really hard. We don't like to say no — and people don't like to hear it. In this regard, email can encourage our worst instincts. It can insulate us from the situation, making it easier to put off delivering bad news. This strategy tends to end in tears. When it comes to rejection, a quick response is almost always appreciated. The sooner you can get it over with, the better both parties feel. Leaving open the door doesn't help, either. Jack Welch, the former head of General Electric, believes that responding to an email request with an absolute "There's just no way I can do that, but good luck" is a greater kindness than answering with a "Maybe" that's never going to happen.

*insulate: 격리시키다

① Make It Quick, Make It Firm When Saying No
② Honesty Is the Best Policy When Apologizing
③ Saying No Isn't Enough to Reject Things
④ Turn the Rejection into an Opportunity
⑤ Open the Door to Run for Your Enemy

*ventilation: 환기

26. Christina Georgiana Rossetti에 관한 다음 글의 내용과 일치하지 않는 것은?

Christina Georgiana Rossetti was born in London, England on December 5, 1830. Her father, a poet and musician, was a political refugee from Italy. Her older brother Dante Gabriel Rossetti was a famous poet and painter. Like other girls of her era, she was schooled at home, since there were few educational opportunities for women. She wrote poems for children as well as adults. She had strong religious ideals and as a result, she passed up opportunities to marry men who did not share her passion in faith. She had some famous friends such as the famous painter James Abbott Whistler and Lewis Carroll. She died of cancer in December of 1894 at the age of 64. She never had children of her own, but loved her brother's children very much. In fact, she was known for her love of children, and many of her poems reflect that love.

Anxiety disorders may be more common in the deaf compared to hearing people ①because of language barriers. For example, Sisia found that deaf children reported more frequent feelings of loneliness, experienced greater anxiety, and ②had weaker social networks and support systems. However, other findings are not the same, with some scholars ③suggest that attachment is not more insecure, and that social anxiety and loneliness are not higher in the deaf population. For example, McKinnon did not find significant differences between the attachment style of 50 deaf students who had ④mostly attended residential schools and a similar group of hearing students. Bossaert also suggested that there are no significant differences in loneliness between typically developing adolescents and ⑤those with sensory disabilities. Some researchers have even found that the deaf population had lower social anxiety than their hearing counterparts.

sensory disability: 감각 장애

30. 다음 글의 밑줄 친 부분 중, 문맥상 낱말의 쓰임이 적절하지 않은 것은? [3점]

Conflict and hostility between racial groups can be overcome by creating situations that require the groups to cooperate to achieve a ①common goal. Such situations occasionally occur — for example, when people from different racial backgrounds ②compete in sports or when they work side by side in school and in industry. Unfortunately, the integration and friendship found in such settings are not sufficient to ③worsen the more deep-seated prejudices of many racist individuals. As film director Spike Lee has said, racists ④place all black people in one of two categories: "entertainers and blacks." By this he means that people with racist sentiments tend to ⑤exclude famous entertainers and sports stars from their negative feelings about blacks as a group, thereby strengthening their failure to see all blacks as individual human beings.

【31~34】 다음 빈칸에 들어갈 말로 가장 적절한 것을 고르시오.

31. The influence of _____ on the formation of beliefs is well established in psychological articles and papers. For example, psychology has established that happy individuals have a greater tendency than sad people to believe that objects they appraise have a high value. Happy individuals are more likely to believe that the word they have just heard is "morning" rather than the homophonous "mourning." The opposite is true of sad individuals. Ask sad and happy individuals about, say, the percentage of orphans who are undernourished. Sad individuals will believe that a high percentage is undernourished. Happy people believe a lower percentage is.

*appraise: 가격을 감정하다
homophonous: 동음이의어의

① emotions ② parents ③ culture
④ education ⑤ language

32. Humans actively share resources with one another to a much greater degree than do other great apes, and much human sharing is governed by social value of _____. When receiving resources, human children begin showing tendencies towards equitable distribution with others at five to seven years of age. The primitive situation for human sharing of resources follows cooperative activities such as collaborative hunting, when several individuals must share the spoils of their joint efforts. Children of around three years of age share with others much more equitably in collaborative activities than they do in either windfall or parallel-work situations. By contrast, chimpanzees share just as often whether they have collaborated with them or not. This species difference raises the possibility that humans' tendency to distribute resources equitably may have its evolutionary roots in the sharing of spoils after collaborative efforts. [3점]

*spoils: 전리품, 성과
parallel-work: 유사한 일

① respect for individualism
② free competition
③ love for animals
④ fairness and equity
⑤ efficiency and productivity

33. Effort and patience are not just important for getting "stuff." They're even more important for _____. As social animals, most of us like spending time around other people at least some time during the day, and most of us want to have close relationships with people we can have fun with and depend on. But maintaining true friendships doesn't just happen. It takes work. True friends look out for each other's well-being, which means sometimes one friend may have to sacrifice doing something he or she wants to do to help the other friend. The same is true in marriage. Maintaining a good marriage requires a mutual commitment to caring about the well-being of the other person. [3점]

① staying alive in a competitive society
② building lasting relationships in life
③ getting good grades in school
④ being satisfied with your abilities
⑤ preventing accidents from happening

34. When faced with two equal choices, people often buy for no other reason than they associate one choice with someone they know. Like me, my friends shop at Wine Library, and they go out of their way to do so. Most of my friends from high school shop at Wine Library, too. There is a consumer out there who buys from a certain computer brand because he has an uncle who works there. There are plenty of people who never stopped buying their gas at Exxon after the terrible oil spill, even though they were upset by the environmental catastrophes the company caused, because they have friends or relatives connected to the company. Social media, which allows people to see their family and friends' preferences and interactions with brands, allows many more chances for people to _____. [3점]

*catastrophe: 큰 재해

① show off their fine tastes by posting good-looking photos
② find a channel to voice their protest against unethical companies
③ compare prices of the products within a few taps on their phone
④ communicate with friends without worrying about others' judgments
⑤ make the personal associations that can lead to buying decisions

Television's increasing importance in political campaigns has resulted in large increases in campaign spending. In the early days of television, expenditures on the media for political advertising increased 600% between 1952 and 1974. ①The reason for the increase was a major change in the way campaigns allocated money. ②Many scholars have criticized the way television has covered political campaigns, arguing that the characteristics of this coverage have done great harm to the political process. ③For example, in 1956, 85% of presidential campaign expenditures was spent on setting up rallies for in-person speeches by the candidates. ④Three presidential elections later, with total expenditures four times greater, more than half the money was spent on television ads. ⑤And the television budget continued to increase dramatically, resulting in smaller budgets for field operations such as setting up rallies, local campaign offices, campaign buttons, and bumper stickers.

*rally: (대규모) 집회

> Smiling begins during the first few weeks of life, but at first, it is not directed at anything in particular. By about the fifth week, it is being given as a definite reaction to certain stimuli.

(A) At this stage, around three to four months, the response starts to become more specific. It is narrowed down from any old face to the particular face of the mother. Parental imprinting is taking place.

(B) Two black spots with a mouth-line below them are now more efficient at eliciting the response from the baby. Soon a widening of the mouth becomes vital, and then the eyes begin to lose their significance as key stimuli.

(C) The baby's eyes can now fixate on objects. At first, it is most responsive to a pair of eyes staring at it. Even two black spots on a piece of card will do. As the weeks pass, a mouth also becomes necessary. [3점]

> On the Socratic principle that no harm can come to a good person, the Stoics believed that so long as one holds one's virtue, one has well-being.

(A) In contrast, Aristotle believed that there is more to our well-being than our own personal character. Poverty can deprive us of the leisure or minimal material sustenance needed for living a good life.

(B) Material misfortune can damage our well-being. In Aristotle's view, virtue is a necessary but not a sufficient condition for our eudaimonia. We need at least a minimum of supportive surroundings.

(C) Material misfortune can never force us to lose our virtue or, therefore, our well-being. Therefore, the Stoics wanted to be indifferent to material circumstances.

> Instead, Traditional Chinese combined pictures to create new abstract meanings as it developed.

The reason why Traditional Chinese has so many characters is that it doesn't really work phonetically, so words cannot be built up from single sounds. ( ① ) Instead, there is a separate character for each word. ( ② ) Originally, written Chinese was based on simple graphic pictures (pictographs) of natural objects. ( ③ ) There are pictographs like this dating back to the eleventh century BC. ( ④ ) Many written languages started like this and moved towards a phonetic alphabet, but Traditional Chinese did not shift like the other languages. ( ⑤ ) Thus a combination of the pictures for sun and moon meant 'bright' while a combination of the pictures for woman and child meant 'happiness'.

> In contrast, the university may have a vision to be recognized as the "best" university in the country.

All organizational changes should be consistent with an organization's mission, vision, and resulting strategic plan. A mission statement represents the "reason" an organization exists, and an organization's vision is a long-term goal that describes "what" an organization wants to become. ( ① ) Consider how the difference between mission and vision affects organizational change. ( ② ) Your university probably has a mission to educate people. ( ③ ) This mission does not necessarily imply anything about change, and it simply defines the university's overall purpose. ( ④ ) This vision requires the organization to benchmark itself against other world-class universities and to create plans for achieving the vision. ( ⑤ ) While vision statements point the way, strategic plans contain the details needed to create organizational change.

> When you are with another person and you both are in harmony, both of you have similar body language. It is something that naturally occurs. When you sit opposite a friend in a restaurant and you both are in a friendly conversation, your body language is similar. When one person is talking and bending forward, the other person leans forward also. When two people are not in harmony, their body language does not match. Joel and Kathy were newly married. Kathy was upset with Joel because he refused to hang up his clothes. They were scattered across their apartment. Both of them were sitting opposite each other eating dinner. Joel stopped eating and had his arms folded across his chest. Kathy was leaning forward telling him why he should hang up his clothes. He had a frown on his face. She was wearing an artificial smile. Their body language was not at all similar. Instead, it reflected the differences of opinion they had about this issue.

【41～42】 다음 글을 읽고, 물음에 답하시오.

The division of labor has given us many of the blessings of civilization. Specialization is what (a) allows me to sit at a computer thinking about climate change. Yet this same division of labor obscures the line of connection — and responsibility — linking our everyday acts to their real-world consequences. Therefore, this makes it (b) easy for me to overlook the coal-fired power plant that is lighting my screen, or the mountaintop in Kentucky that had to be destroyed to provide the coal to that plant, or the streams running red with heavy metals as a result.

Of course, what made this sort of specialization (c) possible in the first place was cheap energy. Cheap fossil fuel allows us to pay distant others to process our food for us, to entertain us, and to work on solving our problems. Think for a moment of all the things you suddenly need to do for yourself when the power goes out. Think, too, about how a power failure causes your neighbors — your community — to suddenly seem so much (d) smaller in your life. Cheap energy allowed us to leapfrog (e) local community by making it possible to bring into our lives the specialties of countless distant others.

"Sir," said Grétry sharply, "(b) I never talk in an inn." The nobleman saw the joke, and the two then entered into friendly conversation.

(C)

As soon as they had begun their journey, Grétry began a conversation with his lordship, saying, "Ah, sir, how delighted I am with...." "Sir," interrupted the baron, "I never talk in a carriage." The next day, they were climbing up Mount Cenis. Grétry noticed a small cross stuck in the ground and (d) he asked the guides what it meant. He was answered sharply with one word, "Silence!" "How now," thought our Frenchman, "are these some more German barons?" But he kept quiet until the end of their climb, when the guides told (e) him that any conversation or noise might, by the vibration of the air, loosen some of the masses of snow and cause an avalanche.
